ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

In the process of compiling and editing the information on Bristol voyages to Africa contained in this volume I have received assistance and advice from various individuals and organisations. The task of collecting the material was made much easier from the outset by the generous help and advice I received from the staff at the Public Record Office, the Bristol Record Office, the Bristol Central Library and the Bristol Society of Merchant Venturers. I am grateful to the Society of Merchant Venturers for permission to consult its records and to cite material from them. I am also indebted to the British Academy for its generosity in awarding me a grant in order to allow me to complete my research on Bristol voyages to Africa. Publication of the volume has been generously assisted by grants from the Bristol University Publications Fund and the Marc Fitch Fund. Finally, I am very grateful to Miss Mary Williams, former City Archivist in Bristol, and Professor Patrick McGrath, formerly General Editor of the Bristol Record Society, for their warm response to my original proposal for a series of volumes on Bristol voyages to Africa, and to Dr Joseph Bettey, the Society's present General Editor, for his patience and assistance in producing this third volume on African voyages.
INTRODUCTION

Bristol's emergence as a major slaving port was one of the more striking features of the development of British trade to Africa during the first forty years of the eighteenth century. Reflected in a growth in annual clearances of ships to Africa from less than 5 around 1700 to 50 or more at various times during the 1730s, the rapid expansion of Bristol's trade to Africa contributed substantially to the general increase in British slaving activity that occurred in the quarter century after 1713 and made it Britain's premier slaving port during the decade prior to the War of Jenkins' Ear. Bristol's ascendancy in Britain's African trade was relatively short lived, however, for after the outbreak of war with France in 1743, clearances of ships from Bristol to Africa fell abruptly and allowed Liverpool to begin to dominate the British slave trade.

Despite conceding supremacy to its northern rival, Bristol's interest in the African trade revived strongly during the closing years of the War of Austrian Succession and generally remained substantial during the 1750s and 1760s. The data collected in this volume show, in fact, that Bristol merchants fitted out almost 600 voyages to Africa, the vast majority for slaves, between 1746 and 1769. The level of annual clearances of ships from Bristol to Africa in these decades still remained nevertheless only about half what it was at the peak of the port's involvement in the African trade in 1728–32 and 1737–8. The modest nature of the recovery of Bristol's African trade after the slump of 1743–6 is intriguing, for British trade in general with Africa expanded rapidly after 1748, largely as a result of a substantial growth in demand for slaves in the Caribbean and North America during the quarter century before the American Revolution.1 The latest figures available suggest that exports of slaves from Africa by the British doubled during this period, rising from about 20,000 a year around 1750 to about 40,000 a year in the early 1770s. This expansion in slave shipments was reflected in turn by an increase in clearances of ships from British ports to Africa from approximately 90 to 160–190 a year. Almost all of this increase was accounted for by ports in north-west England, notably Liverpool, as well as London. Not surprisingly, therefore, Bristol's share of Britain's trade to Africa fell sharply from over 40 per cent in the 1730s to around 15 per cent in the early 1770s.\(^2\)

Despite their diminished importance in the Africa trade, Bristol merchants still remained one of the largest British and indeed European groups of investors in the Atlantic slave trade in the 1750s and 1760s. As a result, the material on Bristol voyages to Africa presented in this volume is an important source of information about the conduct and organisation of the Atlantic slave trade from Africa to America in these years. In the remaining sections of this introduction, I shall first discuss the major sources of evidence available for tracing Bristol voyages to Africa between 1746 and 1769 and then outline the major features of Bristol's slave trade in this period.

I. SOURCES AND METHODOLOGY

Although there are very few surviving collections of papers of Bristol merchants involved in the African trade in the early eighteenth century, official commercial and shipping records, as earlier volumes in this series have shown, still provide a large amount of information about the voyages of Bristol ships to Africa during the first half of the eighteenth century. Particularly useful in this respect are the Exchequer K.R. Port Books (PRO E190 series), the Mediterranean Passes (PRO ADM 7 series), the Bristol Wharfage Books (Society of Merchant Venturers Hall), and the Colonial Naval Office Shipping Lists (PRO CO series). The nature of these records and the sort of information they supply have been discussed in earlier volumes in this series and readers are referred to them for a detailed discussion of these matters. On certain aspects of Bristol's trade to Africa in the early eighteenth century, particularly its distribution along the coast and the numbers of slaves loaded per ship, these records provide only limited evidence. Nevertheless, they do supply important information about the ships involved in the African trade, their owners, their voyage patterns, and the numbers of slaves delivered to America.

These records continue to supply vital data about Bristol voyages to Africa during the 25 years covered by the present volume. Sadly, there are no outward overseas Port Books available for Bristol between 1743 and 1751 and the inward books cease altogether after 1742. There is, however, a fairly continuous series of outward books from 1752 to 1769 and beyond, as well as good, though not complete, series of Mediterranean Passes and Wharfage Books throughout the period from 1746 to 1769. As in earlier years, the survival rate of Naval Office Shipping Lists varies considerably from one colony to another in this period. There are only scattered lists for Barbados and apparently none at all for the four Leeward Islands of Antigua, Montserrat, Nevis and St Kitts. The lack of lists for Antigua and St Kitts is especially disappointing, for other evidence suggests these two colonies were important markets for Bristol slave traders in the quarter century after 1745. By comparison with the smaller British islands in the Caribbean, there are relatively good series of Naval Office Shipping Lists for South Carolina, Virginia and Jamaica throughout the period as well as lists for Grenada, one of the West Indian islands ceded by France to Britain in 1763, from 1764 to 1767. The comparatively high survival rate of Jamaican lists after 1745 is important, for the island was the largest single market for slaves supplied by Bristol traders in this period.

Information about Bristol voyages to Africa in 1746–69 is also to be found in several other sources. Three deserve to be noted. First, there are several surveys of British trade to Africa during this period. These include a record kept by Gilbert Petrie, an official of the Company of Merchants Trading to Africa, of British ships trading at the Gold Coast between 1755 and 1768; lists of Bristol ships trading to Africa in 1747, 1749 and 1754, together with the costs of their outlays, expected numbers of slaves, and intended trading location at the coast; and an annual listing of ships clearing Bristol for Africa that covers the whole period from 1750 to 1776. Contained in the Board of Trade papers, this last document is particularly useful, for it lists the names of ships and their masters and allows one to cover some of the gaps that exist in other sources, notably the Port Books and Mediterranean Passes. Second, there is from 1752 onward a fairly complete series of a local newspaper, Felix Parley’s Bristol Journal. Published weekly, this provides details of ships entering out and sailing from Bristol, their movements abroad, and occasionally, in the case of slave ships, the numbers of slaves bought in Africa or delivered to America. Third, and perhaps most importantly, there is a series of muster rolls of crews of Bristol ships, together with a related annual list of Bristol shipping involved in overseas trade. Housed at the Society of Merchant Venturers Hall, Bristol, these muster rolls begin in 1747 and originated in the establishment of a pension fund for seamen derived from the levying of ‘seamen's sixpences’ on the crews of vessels leaving Bristol and other British ports. Payable by seamen themselves, the dues were collected at Bristol by the Society of Merchant Venturers. To facilitate their collection, masters were expected to keep detailed records of ships’ voyages and their crew, including the dates and places of their enlistment and discharge. A perusal of the muster rolls shows that details about the places at which seamen were enlisted or discharged were sometimes omitted, but for the most part they provide an extremely valuable source of information about the manning levels, voyage times and movements abroad of Bristol ships from 1747 onward. Moreover, as the list of shipping associated with the muster rolls gives details of changes in ships’ names between voyages, one is also able to trace with greater confidence than usual the regularity with which individual Bristol ships were employed in specific trades, including the African trade.

In addition to a greater variety of shipping records, trade surveys and newspapers, there is also an increase in collections of private papers of merchants relating to Bristol slaving voyages from the 1740s onward. Particularly significant in this respect are the accounts of James Day, which relate to the voyages of the Jason in 1746–52 as well as several other earlier slaving voyages from Bristol; the logbook of the voyages of the Molly in 1750–2; the accounts of the Swift in 1759; and the logbook of the Black Prince in 1762–4. The first three of these sets of accounts supply highly detailed information about the costs and financial outcomes of the voyages concerned as well as the numbers and selling prices of slaves sold in America. The logbook of the Black Prince provides a daily record of one complete slaving voyage and part of another. The data contained in these sources relate, of course, to only a very small fraction of the voyages included in this volume, but their value for analysing the economics of the Bristol slave trade is perhaps enhanced by combining them with other evidence gleaned from merchants papers. A number of collections of papers of colonial planters and merchants has proved useful in generating evidence relating to the sale of slaves from Bristol ships in America and the loading of Bristol slave ships on their homeward voyage. Prominent among these are the accounts of the Spring Plantation in Jamaica and the correspondence of Thomas Mills of St Kitts and John Guerard and Henry Laurens of South Carolina.9

7 The fact that the names of ships sometimes changed weakens the reliability of some recent attempts to trace the numbers of voyages made by individual ships in the slave trade. For one such attempt, based solely on the Naval Office Shipping Lists of South Carolina and Virginia, see W.E. Minchinton, “Characteristics of British Slaving Vessels, 1698–1775”, Journal of Interdisciplinary History, XX, no. 1 (1989), p. 72.

The wide range of records available allows one to produce reasonably reliable lists of vessels clearing each year from Bristol for Africa between 1746 and 1769. It seems unlikely in fact that more than a handful of vessels leaving the port for Africa in these years has escaped detection. However, information about ships’ voyages is variable. Evidence about some aspects of Bristol’s trade with Africa between 1746 and 1769 remains very limited. This is particularly the case with respect to slave prices, the numbers of slaves actually loaded at the coast, and the numbers who were lost in the Atlantic crossing. On these aspects of Bristol’s slave trade, the information unearthed for the period covered by the present volume is only marginally better than that found for the period up to 1745. On the other hand, because of the greater availability of shipping records, it is possible to document in more substantial detail than ever before the main characteristics of the ships employed by Bristol merchants in the African trade and to trace their individual voyage histories. In addition to information about the tonnage, armaments and place of construction for most of the ships involved in the trade, we have, as a result of the muster rolls, much information about the crews of the great majority of Bristol ships bound for Africa after 1746. This includes not only details about the number and status of crew but also what happened to them during the course of voyages. At the same time, we are able in most instances to establish the markets in British America to which Bristol ships delivered their slaves and in some 45 per cent of cases to indicate the numbers of slaves delivered.

Furthermore, while information about the numbers of slaves loaded in Africa remains slender, evidence has been found about their coastal origins in the case of some 310 or 52 per cent of the voyages listed in the volume. Compared to earlier periods, this represents a major improvement in our knowledge of the coastal distribution in Africa of Bristol's slave trade.

The method chosen for summarising the voyage data of Bristol vessels contained in the present volume essentially follows that used in earlier volumes. Vessels are listed alphabetically by name according to the year in which they embarked on their voyage to Africa. Basic information about each vessel and its voyage is then itemised under 14 headings, as follows:

(1) The tonnage and armament of the vessel
(2) The size of the vessel's crew, both outward from Bristol and on its homeward journey, or otherwise specified
(3) The place and year of construction of the vessel
(4) The place and date of its registration
(5) The master(s) of the vessel
(6) The owner(s) of the vessel
(7) The vessel's date of departure from Bristol or other (named) port
(8) The vessel's recorded place or places of trade in Africa
(9) The number or intended (*) number of slaves shipped in Africa
(10) The port or ports of arrival of the vessel in America
(11) The vessel's date(s) of arrival at the port(s) in America
(12) The number of slaves delivered to or sold at the port(s) in America
(13) The date of departure of the vessel from its last port of call in America
(14) The date of the vessel's return to Bristol or other known outcome to the voyage.

A lack of information about a vessel or its voyage under any of these headings is signalled by a blank entry, except for (8), where a blank entry normally indicates that the vessel's trading location was referred to simply as 'Africa'. Where there is information about the dates of both departure and return of vessels at Bristol and the issue and return of Mediterranean Passes, the latter is given in brackets under (7) and (14). Any information given to clarify evidence from contemporary sources or that lacks proper documentary support is entered in square brackets.

The availability of new sources from the 1740s leads to some overlapping in types of information about Bristol vessels and their voyages to Africa between 1746 and 1769. In the case of tonnages, places of construction, and masters and owners of vessels, the information given in one source often duplicates exactly that found in another. In the case of crew sizes and numbers of slaves delivered, however, variations in the information given by different sources frequently occur. These are, of course, a useful reminder of the fallibility of eighteenth-century records and the need to approach the data they supply with caution. They also pose problems for summarising the data under the headings noted above. For the sake of consistency, I have followed in the present volume the method adopted in earlier volumes for arranging entries under the various headings. Thus I have preferred the registers of Mediterranean Passes and the Naval Office Shipping Lists as the primary sources of information for entries under (1) to (4) and (10) to (13), the Port Books for entries under (5) and (6), and the Wharfage Books for entries under (14). The exception is heading (7), where I have assumed that the final date of enlistment of crew at Bristol, as given by ships’ muster rolls, provides a closer approximation to the date of departure of ships from Bristol than the last date of lading goods on ships given by the Port Books and upon which I previously relied. At the same time, I have also presented in brackets under each of these headings information gleaned from other sources that differs from that found in the main sources used. Multiple entries are common under heading (12) where data on slave deliveries given in the Naval Office Shipping Lists often vary from those given in other sources and under (11), (13) and (14), where data from muster rolls about the dates of enlistment and discharge of seamen at colonial ports and Bristol are included together with those from the Naval Office Shipping Lists and the Wharfage Books. In many cases there is a close correlation between the dates of arrival and departure of ships derived from these latter sources and the dates on which, according to the muster rolls, crew were discharged or enrolled abroad or at Bristol. Consequently, when data from Naval Office Shipping Lists and Wharfage Books are unavailable, muster rolls may be used to suggest the approximate dates of ships’ arrival and departure at colonial ports as well as their return to Bristol.

Evidence about voyages that falls outside the headings described above has been presented at the end of each voyage history, together with references to the various records used. The quantity of supplementary information found varies widely from voyage to voyage, but is generally greater and more diverse than that discovered for the period before 1746. It includes information about the costs of vessels and their fitting out, the dates of their arrival at and departure from the African coast, the sexual composition of slave cargoes, the merchants in America who sold them and the prices they obtained for them, and the sale of vessels on their return to Bristol. Because of limitations of space, data relating to some aspects of Bristol's slaving voyages have not been included. This applies particularly to evidence found in Port Books, merchants papers and Naval Office Shipping Lists about the goods shipped to Africa from Bristol and the cargoes of colonial and African produce that were carried home. Studies of these aspects of slaving voyages using Bristol material have recently been published elsewhere, and readers are referred to these other studies for information relating to these matters.12

The reliability of some of the sources used in this volume has been considered in earlier volumes in this series. Further tests on the reliability of the shipping and voyage data presented in the current volume are possible as a result of the availability of the muster rolls and Bristol newspapers from the late 1740s onward. Comparisons of the muster rolls with other sources reveal some significant discrepancies in the numbers of crew reported on board vessels at various stages of the voyage to Africa and America. Figures given in the muster rolls, probably the most reliable sources on this matter, frequently differ those given in the registers of Mediterranean Passes and the Naval Office Shipping Lists, and suggest that the data given in the latter sources need to be approached with rather more caution than has sometimes been displayed.13 Apart from crew sizes, however, the variations in data between sources tend to be rather small. One is probably justified in assuming, therefore, that the data relating to Bristol vessels and their voyages to Africa presented in this volume provide a reasonably sound basis upon which to investigate the development of the port's African trade in the period from 1746 to 1769.

II. BRISTOL AND THE AFRICAN TRADE, 1746–1769

Although Bristol unquestionably lost its position as Britain's premier slaving port after the 1740s, it remained one of Europe's major ports

trading to Africa during the third quarter of the eighteenth century. Data presented in this volume show that clearances of ships from Bristol to Africa ranged from less than 10 in 1757 to 30 or more a year in 1747–8 and 1763–4, but averaged some 24 a year over the whole period from 1746 to 1769. This level of annual clearances to Africa was noticeably less than in the 1730s, when clearances averaged just over 40 a year. Nevertheless, the number of ships fitted out each year at Bristol for Africa during the 1750s and 1760s more or less equalled that at London and appears to have been greater than that achieved by any European continental or North American port. In this respect Bristol continued to be one of the more prominent slaving ports in Europe in the period after 1746; only in comparison with Liverpool, in fact, can Bristol’s involvement in the trade to Africa in this period be regarded as small.

To rely solely on clearance data to assess the trend in Bristol’s participation in the African trade may, in any case, be misleading, for the cost of fitting out voyages to Africa seems to have been greater at Bristol after 1746 than it was at the height of the port’s clearances to Africa in the 1730s. As in earlier periods, specific evidence on investment by Bristol traders in African ventures remains limited between 1746 and 1769. It is in fact confined primarily to a survey of Bristol ships trading to Africa in 1749. This provides details of investment in some 46 ships undertaking voyages to Africa between 1748 and 1750. Outlays per ship ranged from £2,800 to £10,000, but averaged £5,539. This last figure is some 38 per cent higher than an earlier estimate of the cost of fitting out Bristol voyages to Africa around 1730 that I have published, and if correct, suggests that, despite a decline in numbers of annual clearances, Bristol traders may have invested as much in the African trade in the late 1740s as they had twenty years earlier.

It is necessary, however, to treat the 1749 survey of Bristol’s trade with Africa with caution, for there are indications that, in the case of voyage outlays, the data given may be unreliable. For instance, while the survey suggests that the cost of the Jason’s outfit and cargo in 1748 was £6,600, the detailed accounts of the voyage kept by the ship’s owners reveal that the cost of its outfit and cargo amounted to just under £4,950, or about 25 per cent less. Similarly, evidence gleaned from other sources shows that outfitting costs on six voyages undertaken by the Emperor, the Jason, the Molly, and the Swift between 1746 and 1769 averaged some £36 per ton whereas the outfitting costs of vessels listed in the 1749 survey were, on average, over £49 per ton, or approximately a third higher.\(^{18}\) Almost certainly, therefore, the 1749 survey tends to give an inflated impression of the level of Bristol’s investment in the African trade in the late 1740s. Other evidence still points, nevertheless, to a significant rise in average outlays on Bristol voyages to Africa between 1730 and 1770. Recent studies have indicated, for example, that prices of slaves at the African coast may have risen by up to 40 per cent during the forty years or so before the War of American Independence.\(^{19}\) Since changes in the price of British exports of trade goods to Africa appear to have been relatively limited over the same period, the terms of trade between Britain and Africa moved strongly in favour of Africa and caused British traders to have to give increasing quantities of goods for each slave they bought.\(^{20}\) At the same time, figures on tonnages given in this and earlier volumes reveal that the size of vessels employed by Bristol merchants in the African trade rose from about 90 tons on average around 1730 to 115 tons forty years later. This was accompanied, in turn, by a rise in the number of slaves loaded at the African coast from about 240 slaves per ship in the late 1720s to over 280 slaves per ship in the 1760s.\(^{21}\) Combined with rising prices of slaves at the African coast, these increases in the size and loading of ships must have caused a significant inflation in average outfitting costs of Bristol slave ships between 1730 and 1770. Given the tentative nature of estimates of such costs around 1730, it is impossible to calculate precisely how rapidly costs rose over the ensuing four decades. But it is quite conceivable that by 1770 the cost of fitting out voyages for Africa at Bristol was some 75–100 per cent greater than forty years earlier. If this was so, then it is quite likely that in 1763–4, when over 30 ships a year cleared from Bristol to Africa, investment by the city’s merchants in the African trade may have actually exceeded the level reached at the height of annual clearances from Bristol to Africa in the 1730s.

Financial records have been uncovered for only six Bristol voyages to Africa between 1746 and 1769, and it is extremely difficult, therefore, to establish precisely the level of profits that investors earned from Bristol voyages to Africa in this period. Contemporaries recognised, however, that the ‘African business’ as a risky enterprise and that, as Henry Laurens of South Carolina expressed it in 1755, ‘every one that enters upon it should fortify themselves’ against misfortune. The few surviving accounts of slaving voyages in this period bear ample testimony to Laurens’ warning. Thus, for example, while the Jason achieved a very handsome profit of over £5,000 for its owners from its slaving venture in 1746–8, the Emperor, a vessel which Laurens himself was said to be ‘greatly concern’d in’, appears to have lost as much as £3,000 on its African slaving voyage in 1754–5. Such sharp contrasts in the financial outcomes of African ventures raise serious doubts about the reliability of estimates of profits in the slave trade based on only small samples of voyage records. But it is not without wider significance perhaps that in bemoaning the ‘most shocking’ voyage of the Emperor in 1755, Henry Laurens should have noted, firstly, its failure to obtain at Angola no more than 390 of its intended load of 570 slaves and, secondly, its subsequent loss of some 120 slaves in its passage from Africa to America. In effect, the vessel reached America with only 270 slaves, or less than half its originally intended complement of slaves. Studies published recently have tended to confirm Laurens’ understanding that financial success in slaving depended heavily on ships attaining a high proportion of their intended complement of slaves in Africa and avoiding substantial mortality in the middle passage. In particular, it appears that, as with the Emperor, ships which failed to deliver to America at least 50 per cent or so of their proposed complement of slaves usually made a financial loss on their voyage. The ratio of slave deliveries to complements on ships may thus provide a broad indication of the likely financial returns from Bristol slaving voyages after 1745.

In the period covered by this volume, information about the intended complements of slaves of Bristol vessels is largely confined to 1746–9 and 1754. Comparisons of the stated complements of slaves of these vessels with their known deliveries of slaves reveal considerable variation in the ratio of deliveries to complements and presumably therefore in the profitability of the voyages concerned. For instance, the Greyhound, which in 1749 had a stated complement of 400 slaves and reputedly delivered 384 to Barbados in September 1750, may well have earned its owners as handsome a profit as that achieved by the Jason in 1746–8. By contrast, the Southwell reached Virginia in 1749 with only 284 slaves or just over half of its originally proposed complement and may well have brought its owners considerable financial losses. However, despite the probably disappointing outcome financially of certain voyages and the failure, through accident at sea or slave rebellion, of perhaps 5 per cent of Bristol slave ships a year to complete their triangular voyage, the figures show that ships leaving Bristol for Africa in 1746–9 and 1754 arrived in America with, on average, about three-quarters of their originally proposed complements of slaves. On the basis of recent studies of profitability in slaving, this was quite consistent with the achievement of very solid profits from the African trade at this time. Moreover, the general picture regarding slave deliveries on Bristol vessels in the late 1740s and early 1750s was very similar to that on contemporary Liverpool ships as well as on Bristol’s own ships during the earlier, more expansive phase of the port’s involvement in the African trade in the 1720s. Relying purely on evidence regarding slave complements and deliveries, therefore, it seems that the general rate of profit earned by investors in Bristol’s trade to Africa after the War of Austrian Succession was probably little different from that of their predecessors or of their contemporaries at Liverpool.

As in earlier years, the financing of voyages to Africa from Bristol after 1745 was undertaken by partnerships. Information about the membership of these partnerships is, unfortunately, very incomplete. Details of the shareholdings of individual investors in Bristol voyages to Africa between 1746 and 1769 are in fact available only for the voyages of the Molly in 1751–2 and the Swift in 1759, though apparently full lists of investors have been found for about 40 other African ventures. For the remaining 450 or so voyages covered by this volume, the only evidence found regarding the partnerships that funded them is the name of the agent, or, as he was sometimes known, the ‘purser’, who organised the voyage and managed its affairs. As I have argued elsewhere, these agents seem to have been critical to both the funding and organisation of Bristol’s trade to Africa, for they were not only investors in the voyages that they managed but frequently ‘sleeping partners’ in voyages controlled by others. It appears that agents sometimes received a small fee for their services in managing voyages.

An analysis of the voyage data contained in this volume shows that a relatively small group of agents organised a large proportion of the ventures fitted out in Bristol between 1746 and 1769. Thus, of the 591 voyages to Africa with which Bristol merchants were associated in this period, some 291, or 49 per cent, were managed by just 13 agents. Each of these agents managed at least 10 voyages to Africa between 1746 and 1769 while four of them – Thomas Deane, John Fowler, James Laroche, and John Powell – managed over 25 voyages each. Based around a small elite group of agents, the pattern of management of Bristol's trade to Africa after 1745 was almost identical to that earlier in the century. Closer analysis of agents also shows that several of the leading agents of the 1750s had been major agents during the prime years of Bristol's African trade or were descendants of such agents. Most of those who had dominated Bristol trade to Africa before 1740, however, died or retired from the business during the next decade and were not succeeded in it by members of their own immediate family. As a result, responsibility for organising the trade after the War of Austrian Succession seems to have fallen very largely on the shoulders of new entrants into the business. Perhaps not surprisingly, therefore, there occurred, as the figures in Table 1 show, a relatively high turnover of managers of Bristol voyages to Africa in the early 1750s. This was reminiscent of the decade after 1713 when a large number of new investors also seems to have entered the African trade at Bristol. Out of the influx of new investors after 1748, however, there gradually emerged, as in the 1720s and 1730s, a small group of managers that came to dominate Bristol's trade to Africa. This is reflected in the figures in Table 1 which show that during the 1760s the average number of voyages managed per agent tended to rise as the number of agents managing single voyages fell and the share of voyages managed by the major agents rose.

Recent research has shown that throughout the first half of the eighteenth century the Gold Coast, Bight of Biafra and Angola were the major centres of British trade on the African coast. Together these regions seem to have furnished over two-thirds of the slaves shipped by British traders at the coast, with the remaining one-third being supplied at Senegambia, Sierra Leone and the Bight of Benin. This distribution of British trade partly reflected the success of the Royal African Company in establishing a substantial British presence on the Gold Coast during the late seventeenth century. But it also reflected the large expansion of British trading connections with the Bight of Biafra and Angola by private traders after 1698.

Note ¹: large agents include those who managed more than the average number of voyages per agent during each time period. Within each group of large agents one may also distinguish a number of elite agents who managed at least twice the average number of voyages per agent in each period. The number of agents in this elite group tended to fall steadily from 8 in 1720–24 to 3 or 4 in the 1760s. These agents normally managed around 40 per cent of Bristol voyages to Africa, but their share fell to under 30 per cent in 1750–54.

Sources: for 1715–45, see footnote 10; for 1746–69, see this volume.

Particularly prominent among these traders were Bristol merchants who, on the basis of evidence presented in earlier volumes in this series, may have sent as many as 70 per cent of their African-bound vessels to these two regions at the height of their share of Britain's trade to Africa in the 1730s. Moreover, most of the remaining Bristol vessels in this period seem to have traded at the Gold Coast.

Evidence regarding the trading venues in Africa of Bristol ships between 1746 and 1769 is, as indicated earlier, much fuller than that for the period before 1745. Information of this sort has in fact been found for over half the ships leaving Bristol for Africa in this period. It is difficult to establish precisely the coastal distribution of Bristol trade in Africa from these data, for ships were sometimes listed as including more than one trading centre on their itinerary. This is particularly true of a number of ships in 1749 which were reported as intending to trade at the Windward and Gold Coast. To complicate matters further one of the major sources of evidence about the trading locations in Africa of Bristol ships in this period is a list of ships trading at the Gold Coast in 1755–68 kept by Gilbert Petrie of Cape Coast Castle.\textsuperscript{34} Since this relates primarily to one region, the use of Petrie's list may tend to produce an inflated impression of the relative importance of the Gold Coast for Bristol traders between 1746 and 1769. Taking the figures at face value, however, it appears that the general distribution of Bristol's trade at the African coast in the quarter century after 1745 was broadly similar to that prevailing in the 1730s. Thus, of the 308 vessels whose trading locations are known, fewer than 20 per cent seem to have traded at Senegambia, Sierra Leone, the Windward Coast, and the Bight of Benin, while over 40 per cent traded at the Bight of Biafra, 25 per cent at the Gold Coast, and 15 per cent at Angola. Even allowing for possible bias arising from the use of Petrie's list, these figures imply a significant change in the relative importance of Angola and the Gold Coast as trading venues for Bristol ships after 1745, with the Gold Coast displacing Angola as second in importance after the Bight of Biafra. More generally, they also suggest that, despite changes in the management of the port's African voyages, over 80 per cent of Bristol's trade with Africa between 1746 and 1769 continued to be conducted at those areas of the coast that earlier generations of Bristol traders had most commonly frequented. Interestingly, figures for Liverpool suggest that its merchants showed distinctly less enthusiasm than those of Bristol for trade with the Gold Coast and Angola during the 1750s and 1760s, and preferred instead to direct more of their attention to opening up trade with other areas of the African coast, notably Sierra Leone, the Cameroons and Gabon.\textsuperscript{35}

From the evidence of coastal distributions of trade, therefore, Bristol merchants seem to have been rather conservative in their approach to trade at the African coast by the 1750s and to have lacked the enterprise that apparently characterised some contemporary Liverpool traders.

Although Bristol merchants were perhaps conservative in their trading habits at the African coast, they appear to have been fairly flexible after 1745 in adjusting slave deliveries to changing market demands for slaves in the New World. As noted earlier, data have been found about the markets in America for 519 or 94 per cent of the slave cargoes carried by the vessels listed in this volume. These show that Bristol ships delivered slaves to some 20 different colonies in America between 1746 and 1769.\textsuperscript{36} As in earlier periods, the distribution of slave sales among these colonies was very uneven,

It should be noted that the estimates of the regional distribution of British slave trading between 1750 and 1779 given in the latter rest essentially on Liverpool evidence.

\textsuperscript{36} In my analysis of cargo destinations, I exclude the small numbers of slaves that ships sometimes discharged at places other than their main market.
with 485 cargoes being sold at just 8 colonies and 34 cargoes at the remaining 12. Of the 485 cargoes, 197 were sold at Jamaica, 108 at St Kitts, 44 at Antigua, 42 at South Carolina, 36 at Virginia, 23 at Dominica, 19 at Barbados, and 16 at Martinique. Almost all those sold at Martinique were from Bristol vessels captured by the French in wartime. Of the remaining 34 cargoes, 8 were sold at Guadeloupe, 4 each at Georgia and Spanish America, 3 each at Grenada, Maryland, Montserrat and Tortola, 2 at Nevis, and one each at New York, St Croix, St Eustatius and St Vincent.

From these data it is clear that Jamaica remained the largest single market for slaves delivered to America by Bristol ships between 1746 and 1769. Moreover, apart from Dominica, which only became a British colony in 1763, most of the other major American markets supplied by Bristol slave traders after 1746—Antigua, St Kitts, South Carolina and Virginia—had been important markets for the port’s slave traders in the 1730s. In this respect, therefore, the pattern of sales of Bristol slave cargoes in America in the period covered by the present volume broadly resembled that of the immediately preceding decades. Some important differences between the market distribution of slave cargoes before and after 1745 are nevertheless discernible. The first and most obvious is that the number of markets to which Bristol merchants supplied slaves after 1745 was twice as large as in earlier periods. This dispersal in slave sales across a wider range of markets was attributable in part to British military successes and territorial expansion in the Caribbean in 1759–63, and led to some easing of the very high levels of market concentration of slave sales that had characterised the Bristol slave trade during the first four decades of the eighteenth century. Estimates of market concentration depend, of course, upon the measure assumed, but calculated on the basis of the number of slave cargoes sold in the four principal markets at any time, it appears that the level of market concentration in Bristol slave sales in America fell from approximately 90 per cent before 1745 to 75 per cent in 1746–69.

In addition to this greater dispersal of slave sales, two other changes in the market distribution of Bristol slave cargoes after 1745 are worth noting. First, the proportion of Bristol slave cargoes sold in South Carolina and Virginia fell significantly after 1745 and led to an overall decline in the proportion of Bristol cargoes sold at North 37 Richardson (ed.), Years of Expansion, op. cit., p. xxvi; idem, Years of Ascendancy, op. cit., p. xviii.

38 Richard Pares, War and Trade in the West Indies 1739–63. London, 1963 ed., pp. 186–226, 590–596. Guadeloupe and Martinique were captured from the French by the British in 1759 and 1762 respectively, but were returned to French control in 1763. Cuba fell under British control in 1762 but was returned to Spain in 1763. Dominica, Grenada, St Lucia, St Vincent and Tobago were all taken by Britain during the Seven Years War; with the exception of St Lucia, which was returned to France, all were retained by Britain after 1763.
American markets from 27 per cent in 1730–45 to below 17 per cent in 1746–69. Bristol merchants' traditional dependence on West Indian markets to absorb most of their slave cargoes became, therefore, even more pronounced during the third quarter of the eighteenth century. Second, while Jamaica continued to be the largest single market served by Bristol slave ships, its dominance of the port’s trade in slaves was weakened substantially by the expansion of Bristol trade with other West Indian islands, notably St Kitts, Antigua and, after 1763, Dominica. The scale of Jamaica's decline as a market for slaves carried by Bristol ships is difficult to calculate precisely in the absence of complete information on the size of Bristol slave cargoes. A simple count of numbers of cargoes delivered shows, however, that Jamaica's share of Bristol cargoes sold in the British Caribbean islands fell from 69 per cent in 1730–45 to 49 per cent in 1746–69 while its share of Bristol cargoes sold throughout America fell from 51 per cent to 38 per cent. Unlike 1730–45, therefore, it was trade with the smaller West Indian islands that proved to be the most expansive sector of the Bristol slave trade in the twenty-five years after 1745.

These changes in the distribution of Bristol slave sales in America reflected in part shifts in the demand for slaves among the various British plantation colonies. Various factors shaped the demand for slaves in British America at this time. Since the working lives of most slaves were largely spent in producing crops such as sugar, rice and tobacco for export to Britain and elsewhere, demand for slaves was primarily determined by trends in the price and output of export staples. In this respect, demand conditions for slaves in British America were relatively buoyant in the third quarter of the century, for prices of most plantation crops tended to rise after 1748 and to encourage expansion in their production.39 Thus, for instance, Jamaican sugar exports appear to have roughly doubled between the 1740s and the late 1760s, while the incomes of South Carolina planters may conceivably have tripled between 1750 and 1770 as a result of increases in the price and output of their export staples, rice and indigo.40 Not surprisingly, the number of slaves bought each year by planters residing in Jamaica rose by over a third between the 1730s and the 1760s, while the number bought by planters at South Carolina more than doubled between 1750 and the early 1770s.41

40 For figures on Jamaican sugar production, see Noel Deerr, History of Sugar, 2 volumes, London, 1949–50, I, pp. 198–199. Estimates of South Carolina planters’ incomes from export crops can be found in my “The Volume and Pattern of the English Slave Trade to South Carolina before 1776”, Slavery and Abolition, forthcoming.
41 For figures on retained slave imports at Jamaica, see 30 January 1778, Stephen Fuller to the Board of Trade, P.R.O. CO 137/38, Hh3, 4. Estimates of slave deliveries to South Carolina are from my “Slave Trade to South Carolina”, op. cit.
Closer scrutiny of the slave trade statistics of Jamaica shows, however, that the trend in agricultural production in plantation colonies was not the only factor to influence levels of slave imports into such colonies. Traditionally, Jamaica acted as an entrepôt for trade between Britain and the colonies of other nations, particularly Spain, and as such became a major centre for re-exporting slaves to Spanish America during the eighteenth century. The exact scale of this re-export trade is unknown, but figures presented by Stephen Fuller, agent for Jamaica, to the Board of Trade in 1778 suggest that some 28,000 slaves; equivalent to roughly one-eighth of the slaves imported at the island, were re-exported from Jamaica to other colonies during the third quarter of the eighteenth century. At the same time, it is clear that the level of re-exports fluctuated considerably from year to year, varying from less than 5 per cent of slave imports in 1762 to over 25 per cent of imports in 1760 and 1764. Even in these last two years, however, re-exports of slaves from Jamaica were still substantially below what they had been in the 1720s and 1730s. It is plain, therefore, that, relative to the two decades before the War of Jenkins' Ear in 1739, the re-export trade in slaves from Jamaica, based largely, it seems, on demands for slaves in Spanish America, was severely depressed throughout the third quarter of the eighteenth century. As a result, even in the peak years of slave purchase by the colony's own planters in the 1750s and 1760s, total slave imports into Jamaica were only slightly greater than they had been in the early 1730s, when the re-export trade in slaves at the island was at its height.

Although shipments of slaves from Jamaica to Spanish America after 1748 were well below previous levels, re-exports of slaves from several of the British islands in the eastern Caribbean seem to have expanded considerably during the 1750s and 1760s. The growth in re-exports of slaves from these islands may have been stimulated in part by trade with the Dutch colony of St Eustatius and the Spanish colonies of Cuba and Puerto Rico. But it seems to have depended in the main on shipments of slaves to the French sugar colonies. Recent studies have suggested that, among the French sugar islands, Guadeloupe and Martinique were neglected by French slave traders after 1748 in favour of St Domingue, and it is probable, therefore, that much of the re-export trade in slaves of the British colonies in the Lesser Antilles was focused on these two islands.\textsuperscript{45} Hard information about the scale of these slave shipments is, unfortunately, difficult to find, but one recent study of the French slave trade has suggested that the number of slaves reaching America in French ships between 1748 and 1775 was some 20–50 per cent lower than the total number of slaves imported into the French sugar islands in these years.\textsuperscript{46} Precisely how the French planters obtained their additional slaves remains uncertain, but it is likely that the majority were transported to America in British ships and were then either sold directly at French islands or bought at the British islands and subsequently shipped to the French colonies. Contemporary reports indicate that, among the British colonies participating in this inter-island traffic, Dominica and Grenada were particularly prominent in the decade before the America Revolution.\textsuperscript{47} At the same time, data on the trade of other islands, notably Antigua, Barbados and St Kitts, shows that slave deliveries after 1748 often seem to have been running at rates that were probably much greater than were necessary to sustain their rather modest and relatively stable levels of sugar production.\textsuperscript{48} Almost certainly, therefore, these islands served, like Dominica and Grenada, as important entrepôts in the trade in slaves between British traders and French and other foreign purchasers of slaves in the Caribbean during the third quarter of the eighteenth century.

Outside the West Indies, demand for slaves also seems to have been influenced by factors other than the earnings of British planters from exports of agricultural staples. At South Carolina, for example, imports of slaves were almost completely halted in 1766–68 by the imposition by the colony’s assembly of prohibitive duties on slave imports.\textsuperscript{49} South Carolina’s loss was, however, Georgia’s gain, for imports of slaves into the latter colony rose in the late 1760s as its output of rice grew and several cargoes of slaves apparently intended \textsuperscript{46} Ibid, pp. 26, 32.

\textsuperscript{48} Figures on slave imports into Barbados in this period are given in R.B. Sheridan, \textit{Sugar and Slavery}, Baltimore, 1974, p. 505. Evidence relating to the number of Bristol and Liverpool slave cargoes delivered to Antigua and St Kitts is presented below in Table 3. Figures on sugar production and exports from these islands are given in Deerr, \textit{op. cit.}, I, pp. 193–197 and Sheridan, \textit{op. cit.}, pp. 490–492.
\textsuperscript{49} Slave imports were cut off for three years beginning on 1 January 1766 by an act of 25 August 1764 which imposed prohibitive duties on slave imports. Donnan (ed.), \textit{op. cit.}, IV, pp. 401, 415.
originally for its northern neighbour were directed to it. At Virginia, too, slave imports were also subject at times to duties imposed by the colonial assembly and this may have affected the level of its import of slaves as well as that of adjacent colonies such as Maryland. A 20 per cent ad valorem duty imposed in 1757 may have been particularly important in depressing official imports of slaves into Virginia in the late 1750s and encouraging their import instead through Maryland. The easing of duties at Virginia in 1761 seems to have stimulated a modest recovery in levels of slave imports into the colony in the 1760s, but, despite expanding employment of slaves by Virginian planters, their imports of slaves in the 1760s seem to have been well below the level prevailing thirty years earlier. One reason for this, perhaps, was an improvement in the reproductive capacity of the colony’s stock of slaves.

Bristol’s pattern of slave deliveries to America after 1746 – with its greater emphasis on the smaller Caribbean islands relative to Jamaica and the North American mainland colonies – appears generally to have followed trends in the demand for slaves in the New World during the third quarter of the eighteenth century. Bristol traders seem, therefore, to have remained as sensitive to changing market conditions for slaves in America in 1746–69 as they had been in earlier years. This is hardly surprising, for even though at the outset of voyages merchants were often undecided about the final market at which their slave cargoes were to be sold, slave factors in the various American ports helped to guide incoming slave ships toward the markets that offered the best prospects for slave sales. Moreover, once the market at which the slaves were to be sold had been settled, the slave factor normally organised their sale and arranged for the recovery of payment for them and the remittance of such payments to Britain. For such services, factors were usually paid a commission of 5 per cent on sales and 5 per cent on returns of the net proceeds.

Slave factors were of major importance to the marketing of British slave cargoes in America throughout the eighteenth century, but their importance may have been further enhanced in the period after 1748 as the scale of British slave sales to French planters increased. Recent research has indicated that the nominal price of slaves in the French islands was normally higher than in the British colonies in this 52 On factors’ commissions, see Bristol Record Office, Account Book of Snow Molly, 18 March 1752, accounts of Bright, Hall & Co.; Hamer and Rogers (eds.), op. cit., VI, p. 88.

The reasons for this remain uncertain. Nevertheless, the higher prices offered by French planters provided an obvious incentive for the British to supply them with slaves and may have helped to stimulate a rise in slave prices generally in British America after 1748. It also appears, however, that French planters were more than usually slow in paying for slaves and in many cases failed to meet all the debts arising from their purchase. Expanding trade with the French islands was perhaps a factor, therefore, in encouraging British traders to reduce the risks they incurred in advancing credit to planters by seeking to develop new remittance procedures in the West Indian sphere of the slave trade in the 1750s. Instead of making payments for slaves, as in earlier years, as they became due, slave factors were expected under this new system to remit the full proceeds of sales of slaves by the ship or 'in the bottom' that delivered them. Moreover, where payment was made in post-dated bills of exchange, the bills were to be drawn against a British merchant house prepared to guarantee them. Evidence regarding this 'bills in the bottom' or 'guarantee' system of remittances, which effectively transferred the burden and risk of providing credit on slave sales from the slave trader to the colonial factor and his British guarantor, is mainly to be found in the records of Liverpool traders.

There are nevertheless signs of its emergence in the 1750s in the few surviving accounts and papers of Bristol slaving voyages for this period. Thus, for instance, in January 1751, John Fowler, master of the Molly, was given no specific instructions by the owners of his ship regarding the remittance of the proceeds from the sale of its slaves in America, whereas in 1759, James McTaggart, master of the Swift, was clearly instructed to demand of the factors who sold his cargo of slaves that they should remit 'six eights of the Net Proceeds in Produce and Bills of Exchange with their Indorsement thereon and the other two Eights so as to compleat the whole in like good Bills of Exchange in twelve Months after the Sale is compleated'.

Factors' knowledge of changing market conditions for slaves in America and their ability to guarantee returns of the proceeds arising from slave sales undoubtedly helped to shape the general pattern of sales of Bristol slave cargoes between 1746 and 1769. The ability of Bristol merchants to respond to changing market conditions and the advice of factors was also influenced, however, by growing competition from other suppliers of slaves. Assessing the competitive position of mid-eighteenth century Bristol slave traders relative to other traders is not easy, but some light might be shed on their position by examining changes in their shares of slave imports at different markets in America. Detailed information on market shares is not available for all the colonies to which Bristol traders delivered slaves in 1746–69. One can calculate, nevertheless, Bristol's share of slave imports at Antigua, Barbados, Grenada, Jamaica, St Kitts, South Carolina, and Virginia for various years before and after 1746. These constituted the largest markets for slaves in British America before the American Revolution, and information relating to Bristol's share of their slave imports is set out in Table 2. In addition, crude estimates may be made of Bristol's share of slave imports at Antigua and St Kitts between 1746 and 1769 as well as several foreign colonies that came under British control during and after the Seven Years War by comparing the total numbers of Bristol and Liverpool slave cargoes delivered to these colonies. The data relating to Bristol and Liverpool slave shipments to these colonies are presented in Table 3.

The figures in tables 2 and 3 describe a complex picture of Bristol merchants' shares of slave imports at these various markets in British America. Bearing in mind that Bristol's share of British annual clearances to Africa fell from 43 per cent in the 1730s to 17 per cent in the 1760s while Liverpool's share rose from 25 per cent to 49 per cent, it is apparent that Bristol merchants lost ground, primarily to 57 Based on my “British Slave Trade”, op. cit..

Liverpool merchants, in most of the older markets for slaves in British America after the 1730s, and, again mainly because of Liverpool competition, succeeded in capturing only modest shares of imports at some of the new colonies that came under British control in 1759–63. Among the older markets, the largest declines occurred at Jamaica, where Bristol’s share of slave imports fell from almost 70 per cent in the late 1720s to 25 per cent in the 1760s, and at Barbados, where Bristol’s share of imports fell from around 35 per cent in the 1720s and 1730s to 2 per cent in 1746–67. Outside these older colonies, Bristol merchants seem to have contributed only very modestly to Guadeloupe’s slave imports in 1759–63 and totally failed to supply any slaves to Grenada during its first four years under Bristol control after 1763. 58

Further inspection of tables 2 and 3 reveals, however, that Bristol traders were not totally eclipsed by Liverpool traders as slave importers to America after 1746. It appears, for instance, Bristol merchants were successful in retaining in the 1750s and 1760s a substantial share of slave imports at Virginia, one of the older, though declining, markets for slaves. Moreover, there are indications that they may have succeeded in both expanding their share of slave imports at Antigua and St Kitts after 1746 and capturing a relatively large share of slave imports into Dominica after it came under British rule in 1763. For none of these last three colonies is it possible to make a precise calculation of Bristol’s share of their slave imports after 1746. It is apparent, nonetheless, that Bristol merchants almost achieved parity with Liverpool merchants in delivering slave cargoes to Antigua in 1748–55 and comfortably outstripped them in numbers of slave cargoes delivered to St Kitts throughout the 1750s and 1760s. In addition, largely because of the endeavours of John Powell, one of the largest Bristol slave merchants in the two decades before 1776, they seem to have captured a rather larger share of slave cargoes reaching Dominica between 1763 and 1770 than their overall standing in the British slave trade in the 1760s might have led one to anticipate. 59 Thus, although Bristol merchants clearly lost much of their earlier dominance of slave supply to several of the major traditional markets for slaves in British America after the 1730s, at these three Caribbean islands at least they seem to have displayed considerable resilience in meeting the challenge of competition from Liverpool and other suppliers of slaves. Indeed, it is highly likely 58 Liverpool merchants claimed that they had delivered some 12,437 slaves to Guadeloupe in 1759–63. Pares, op. cit., pp. 188–189.

59 My voyage data suggest that of the 31 Bristol ships that delivered slaves to Dominica between 1763 and 1776 no less than 18 were managed by John Powell. Since Powell managed, in all, some 58 voyages to Africa during his career, almost a third of his African ventures were involved in supplying slaves to Dominica. Why Powell directed such a high proportion of his slave ships to Dominica is, as yet, unclear.
that, in the case of St Kitts at least, they managed to increase their share of slave imports after 1746 in comparison with their modest share of the island’s imports of slaves in the 1720s.

Their successes in expanding slave imports at certain American markets after 1746 cannot disguise the fact that Bristol merchants failed between 1746 and 1769 to regain their earlier ascendancy in the British slave trade to Africa. Overshadowed by Liverpool throughout the 1750s and 1760s, Bristol was in fact challenged by a revitalised London for the position as Britain’s second slaving port during the decade after the Seven Years War. 60 The reasons for the waning of Bristol’s interest in the African slave trade after the 1730s remain uncertain, though several possible explanations for it have been tentatively suggested by historians. 61 It seems unlikely, however, that it reflected a major decline in the trade’s profitability, for the African trade continued to attract substantial levels of investment at Bristol after the War of Austrian Succession and, on available evidence, yielded fairly satisfactory returns. Moreover, much of this investment was undertaken by groups of new merchants who not only invested regularly in the African trade but also took over the organisation and management of most of the voyages fitted out for the coast. As the data on annual clearances to Africa indicate, these new Bristol slave merchants were unable to mount an effective challenge to Liverpool’s dominance of the African trade after the 1740s. But as the major financiers and organisers of some 25 voyages to Africa a year after 1748 they certainly ensured that their city’s longstanding association with the notorious trans-Atlantic traffic in slaves would continue through to and beyond the War of American Independence.

NOTE ON TRANSCRIPTION

As in previous volumes in this series, no effort has been made to standardise names, whether of people or ships, in this volume. Names are reproduced as far as possible as they appear in the sources used. Where the spelling of names associated with a particular voyage differs from one source to another, I have normally preferred the spelling given in the Port Books to that given in other sources. Entries included without clear documentary evidence to support them are given in square brackets, while doubts about the accuracy of any information given are signalled by (?). References to duties at South Carolina are in local currency. It should be noted that £1 sterling exchanged for over £7 currency in South Carolina during this period (J.J. McCusker, Money and Exchange in Europe and America, 1600–1775, London, 1978, pp. 222–224).

The cost of the vessel's outfit and cargo was £4439.13s., of which £3087.16s. was the cost of cargo. Captain James Day had a ¼ share of the venture. The voyage appears to have been very successful, for an account of 4 March 1747 reveals a net inset of £8353.12s. for the whole venture, with a further £1887.6s. Jamaican currency (or about £1348 sterling) still owing by DuCommon & Co., slave factors in Jamaica.

According to its muster roll, the vessel carried 31 crew outward and returned home with 16. Twenty-nine of the original crew reached Jamaica, and 13 were discharged on 26-30 October 1748. The naval office list suggests the vessel entered Jamaica with 32 crew. It cleared on 1 September 1748 from Jamaica for Portobello with 356 slaves. Whether these included the 243 entered at Jamaica on 24 August is uncertain.

The cost of the vessel’s outfit and cargo was reported to be £5700. According to its muster roll the vessel had 49 crew on its departure from Bristol and 28 on its return. Thirty-nine of the original crew seem to have reached Virginia; 11 were discharged there between 9 September and 3 October 1749. The naval office list suggests that the vessel had 50 crew on its arrival at Virginia.

There is an entry in the Wharfage book, dated 19 August 1749, to a Molly, 70 tons, from Antigua. This may refer to the vessel covered here, in which case it is possible that the Molly may have called at Antigua either before or after visiting Jamaica. According to the muster roll the vessel had 22 crew on its departure from Bristol and 12 on its return home. Of the original crew, 18 seem to have reached Jamaica, where 10 were discharged between 28 February and 7 March. Four new crew were enlisted between 10 April and 29 June 1749.

According to the wharfage book the vessel returned from Africa, but it seems likely that it carried slaves to a market in America. Its muster roll shows that it had 26 crew on its departure from Bristol and 13 on its return home. Five of the crew were lost before December 1748, and a further 8 were discharged during December, probably in an American port.

The cost of the vessel's outfit and cargo was £6084.19s.9d., of which £4206.4s.4d. was the cost of cargo. Net returns from the voyage totalled £6581.11s. by 7 August 1753, with £1153.2s. plus interest still outstanding from DuCommon & French, merchants, of Jamaica. Captain James Day had a \( \frac{1}{4} \) share in the voyage. According to its muster roll the vessel had 33 crew on leaving Bristol and 19 on its return. Twenty-nine of the original crew seem to have arrived at Jamaica. Seventeen were discharged between 27 October and 12 December 1751. Seven new crew were enlisted on 1 May 1752.

Reports from the African coast suggest that the vessel was at Cape Coast in March 1751 and took off 275 slaves for Jamaica. On 5 May 1751 it allegedly fought with the L'Aigle of Nantes at Anamaboe in an attempt to prevent the latter from trading. Subsequent reports suggest that the vessel intended to load 400 slaves and sailed from Africa with 380. According to its muster roll it left Bristol with 31 crew and returned with 18. Twenty of its original crew seem to have reached Jamaica, where 13 were discharged between 3 February and 10 May 1752. Eleven new men enlisted on 2 June.

The Virginia Gazette reported on 16 May 1751 that the vessel had lost very few slaves and that they were all ‘exceeding healthy’. The slaves were consigned to Rootes & Hill for sale. According to its muster roll the vessel had 32 crew on leaving Bristol and 20 on its return. Of the original crew, 6 were reported to have run away between 12 and 19 April 1751, possibly in the West Indies. Twenty-three crew reached Virginia, where 6 were discharged between 21 May and 9 July. Three new men enlisted on 22 July 1751.

According to its muster roll the vessel had 30 crew on leaving Bristol and 13 on its return. Twenty-two of the original crew appear to have arrived at South Carolina. Eleven were discharged between 21 May and 15 June 1752. Two new crew were enlisted on 8 June and 30 July. Inglis, Pickering & Wraxall were agents for the sale of the slaves at South Carolina. Import duties on the slaves totalled £1390 currency. Described as 'a likely parcel', the slaves were sold on and after 25 June, the first 120 reportedly averaging £250 currency for men and £210 currency for women.

Total investment in the voyage was £3864.17s.1d., of which £2333.13s.4d. constituted trade goods. Shareholders in the voyage were Richard Meyler (5/12), Jeremiah Ames (1/10), John Collet (1/10), John Fowler (1/12), Corsley Rogers & son (1/5), and Henry West (1/10). The master was advised to trade initially at the Windward Coast (including Sierra Leone and Bananes), then along the coast to Anamaboe, and finally at Bonny or Calabar where he was expected to complete his purchase of slaves. The sale of slaves at Jamaica was conducted by Bright, Hall & Co. and included 49 men, 32 women, 20 boys, and 24 girls. The average gross price fetched by the slaves was £39.6s. Jamaican currency or £28.2s. sterling. Recorded net returns from the voyage were £2570.6s.3d. According to its muster roll the vessel left Bristol with 23 crew (including 3 taken on at Ilfracombe) and returned with 9. Two extra crew enlisted in Africa. The vessel seems to have arrived at Jamaica with 24 crew and discharged 15 there between 22 December 1751 and 24 March 1752.

According to its muster roll the vessel had 40 crew when it left Bristol, enlisted another man at St Thomas in West Africa on 23 March 1752, and arrived at Virginia with 25 crew. Fourteen were discharged there between 3 June and 26 July 1752, and 4 new men enlisted on 12 August. The vessel had 15 crew on its arrival home. Newspaper reports claimed that it reached Virginia in a sickly condition, a 'malignant disorder' having killed the doctor and his mate, most of the crew, and upward of 200 slaves. The muster roll suggests that the claims regarding the crew were exaggerated.

According to its muster roll the vessel had 23 crew on leaving Bristol and 12 on its return. Eighteen of the original crew appear to have arrived at Jamaica, where 11 were discharged between 15 September and 6 November 1752. Five new crew were enlisted between 24 September and 22 December 1752. The vessel reportedly touched at St Kitts on its way to Jamaica. Watson, Swymmer & Co. were agents for the sale of the slaves at Jamaica. The vessel appears to have been renamed the Rachell before its next voyage in 1753 (see 1753/21).

According to its muster roll the vessel left Bristol with 22 crew and returned with 12. All the original crew appear to have reached St Kitts. Fourteen were discharged there and at Jamaica between 22 December 1752 and 31 January 1753. Four new men enlisted on 13 April 1753. According to Robert Calhoun and Thomas Mills of St Kitts, trade at Anamaboe was dull in 1752, and although the vessel was expected to trade at ‘that part of the Coast’ that ‘furnishes the best Slaves’, they could not agree to sell the slaves if directed to them, given the ‘Limitation’ [i.e. price] set upon them by the vessel’s owners. The vessel was reported to have taken on 154 slaves at Anamaboe, but this was less than the number of slaves it delivered to Jamaica. Hibbert & Spriggs sold the slaves at Jamaica.

Previously known as the Charming Betty (see 1749/5), the vessel’s owners were named as Samuel Sedgley, James Laroche, Cranfield Becher, James Bannister & Co. According to its muster roll it left Bristol with 36 crew and returned with 14. Thirty-three of the original crew appear to have reached South Carolina, although the naval office list suggests it entered with 34. Nineteen crew were discharged there between 12 November and 18 December 1752. The vessel seems initially to have been intended to sell its slaves at Antigua or St Kitts but does not appear to have visited either island. Austin & Laurens were agents for the sale of the slaves at South Carolina on 29 November. Import duties on the slaves totalled £2320 currency.

According to its muster roll the vessel had 31 crew when it left Bristol and returned with 11. Thirty of its original crew appear to have reached Antigua. Nineteen were discharged there between 16 September and 7 October 1753. Writing from St Kitts to Michael Becher, Thomas Mills expressed the hope that the vessel 'may Arrive time Enough to reach Virginia before the Cold weather sets in as you stand a Chance to Sell his Slaves better there than with us'.

According to its muster roll the vessel left Bristol with 37 crew. It took on 8 more crew at Anamaboe between 16 October 1752 and 8 January 1753. It appears to have arrived at Jamaica with 31 crew and to have discharged 23 there between 10 March and 18 May 1753. Thirteen fresh crew were enlisted on 24 June, and the vessel arrived home with 21 men. At Jamaica the slaves were consigned to Bailey, Elworthy & Co. for sale.

According to its muster roll the vessel had 33 crew on departing from Bristol and 18 on its return. Thirty of the original crew seem to have reached St Kitts. Twelve crew were discharged between 30 November 1752 and 2 February 1753. The naval office list suggests that the vessel entered Jamaica with 34 crew. The slaves were consigned to Watson, Swymmer & Co. for sale.

It was reported on 10 February 1753 that the vessel had been lost during a slave revolt in October 1752, three days after sailing from the Bar of Bonny. The master had employed 28 Gold Coast slaves on deck to assist in navigating the vessel. These led a revolt of the slaves which resulted in the death of all the white crew except two men who helped to sail the vessel back to Bonny. There 270 'Bite' slaves were relanded; the remaining 150 slaves reportedly put to sea again.

Total investment in the voyage was some £4069.2s.3d., of which £2843.14s.10d. constituted trade goods. This was described as a large cargo and was expected to buy more slaves than the vessel could carry; the surplus was to be used to buy ivory and other African produce. Although Richard Fowler & Co. were named as merchants involved in the vessel in the port book, the shareholders in the voyage were listed in the vessel's account book as Richard Meyler (5/12), John Fowler (2/5), Corsley Rogers & son (1/5), Jeremiah Ames (3/20), and Henry West (1/10). The master was instructed to trade at Cape Benda in Angola if trade was open, but if it was not then to trade at Malimba or Loango. He was encouraged to 'purchase at Least 3ds of the Male Kind' of slaves. At St Kitts the slaves were sold by James South and included 52 men, 43 women, 66 boys, and 32 girls. The average gross price fetched by the slaves was £19.4s. sterling. Seven of the slaves, all men, were sold to Henry West. Recorded gross proceeds from the voyage totalled £2838.14s.5d. and included earnings from freight to Cork from the West Indies. According to its muster roll the vessel left Bristol with 28 crew and returned with 12. Twenty-five of the original crew appear to have reached St Kitts, where 13 were discharged between 24 May and 1 August 1753. A report that the vessel had been lost in a storm off Cornwall was said on 16 September 1753 to be unfounded; the vessel was reported safe off Padstow.

According to its muster roll the vessel had 27 crew on its departure from Bristol and 21 on its return. All but one of the original crew appear to have reached St Kitts, where 5 were discharged between 1 May and 3 June 1753. A letter of Thomas Mills of St Kitts, dated 23 June 1753, suggested that the sale of the vessel’s slaves had gone well, ‘Owing to the Demand at St Eustatius’. According to Mills, ‘We had not a Cargo of Slaves from any part of the Coast for a Long time before, that stopt, and the French traders was very Eager to buy any thing to send up for Sale that the Cargo was soon bought up but we have been informed that some of the Slaves would not Sell at the French Islands & yt some of them were returnd to St Eustatius’. He later reported that the slaves had ‘turnd out round at more then £20 Sterl. which is [a] great price for Slaves from that Country’, and noted that ‘the Choice of the Men’ had sold at £24 sterling.

According to its muster roll the vessel left Bristol with 28 crew and returned with 16. Twenty-five of the initial crew appear to have reached Jamaica, where 12 were discharged between 4 March and 18 June 1754. Three new crew were enlisted on 5 July. On its next voyage to Africa, the vessel was known as the Mercury (see 1757/4).

Sources: E190/1217/5; ADM 7/88; CO 142/16; SMV Wharfage books; SMV Muster rolls, 1753–4, no. 239; SMV List of shipping; Felix Farley, 21 July 1753, 14 September 1754
According to its muster roll the vessel had 37 crew on leaving Bristol and returned with 17. Thirty-two of its original crew seem to have reached Jamaica, where 20 were discharged between 21 June and 28 July 1754. Six new crew were enlisted on 7 September. The naval office list reported that the vessel had 39 crew when it entered Jamaica. The vessel was reported to have passed St Kitts on its way to Jamaica. At St Kitts the slaves were apparently offered for sale to Wells, Wharton & Doran but they were reportedly so sickly that the firm was unable to accept to sell them even 'at so low a limit as £21 per head'. From this it was concluded by Henry Laurens of South Carolina that the vessel 'must have made the Gentlemen concern'd but a bad Voyage'.

According to its muster roll the vessel left Bristol with 26 crew and returned with 13. All the original crew appear to have arrived at Jamaica, where 18 were discharged between 4 March and 7 May 1754. Five new crew were allegedly enlisted on 2 July as the vessel returned home.

According to its muster roll the vessel had 23 crew on leaving Bristol and 12 on its return home. Eighteen of the original crew reached South Carolina, where 6 were discharged between 9 July and 2 August 1754. The South Carolina Gazette reported on 20 June that the sale of the slaves was to begin on 3 July, agents Austin & Laurens. Import duties on the slaves amounted to £1220 currency. It seems that the slaves consisted of 25 men, 22 women, 70 boys, and 51 girls, and included 92 under 50 inches in height. Described by Laurens as ‘the most mangey Creatures that ever were seen’, they appear to have fetched less than £20 sterling each on average.

Devonsheir, Reeve & Lloyd of Bristol as well as Austin & Laurens of South Carolina were also shareholders in the vessel. Its cargo and outfit were said to have cost over £7100 and it was expected to buy 570 slaves. After calling at Cork, it sailed on 31 July 1754 for Malimba and had 'a short passage to Angola'. It bought only 390 slaves and lost 120 in the middle passage. Spoken with only 170 leagues from South Carolina, it was forced to bear away for Jamaica after a storm off Carolina on 8 April 1755. Peter Furnell sold the surviving slaves at Jamaica, the first 77 of whom reportedly averaged only £28.5s., 'a very poor affair indeed', according to Laurens. Variousely described as a 'ragged' and 'most shocking' voyage, its final losses appear to have amounted to nearly £3000. Austin & Laurens subsequently sold their share in the vessel. According to its muster roll it left Bristol with 33 men and returned with 13. Twenty-eight of its original crew arrived at Jamaica, where 11 were discharged between 27 April and 23 May. Four more were discharged just before the vessel reached Bristol. The naval office list reports that the vessel entered Jamaica with 40 crew.

According to its muster roll the vessel left Bristol with 35 crew. A further 9 were enlisted at the African coast between 11 April and 16 May 1755. The vessel appears to have arrived at Antigua with 34 crew, having lost 10 at the African coast and in the Atlantic crossing; these included 6 killed in a long boat on 26 January 1755. Twenty crew were discharged between 12 September 1755 and 7 February 1756, and a further man died on the run home on 18 May 1756. The vessel arrived at Bristol with 13 crew. A report from Cape Coast suggested that the vessel sailed on 27 February 1755 ‘from Leeward’ with 250 slaves for Jamaica, but it appears from the muster roll that the vessel did not leave the coast before 16 May 1755.

According to its muster roll the vessel left Bristol with 30 crew and returned with 17. Of the original crew, 24 reached South Carolina, where 7 were discharged on 21 July. One man died on the run home. The slaves had smallpox and the ship was put into quarantine for 6–7 weeks before sale of the slaves began on 16 July, agents Inglis, Pickering & Wraxall. Reports on the number of the vessel's slaves varied from 160 to 'near 200'. Import duties on the slaves totalled £1335 currency. Henry Laurens thought the enforced quarantine of the vessel might prove a 'vast injury' to the sale of the slaves as 'Callabar Slaves wont go down when others can be had in plenty', but the early sales of the slaves were promising, with some men fetching £260–270 currency or about £35 sterling.

According to its muster roll the vessel left Bristol with 30 crew and returned home with 18. All but one of the original crew arrived at South Carolina, where 14 were discharged between 1 June and 22 July 1754. Three new crew were enlisted on 11 August. The South Carolina Gazette of 21 May announced that the sale of the slaves would begin on 29 May, agents, Middleton & Brailsford. Import duties on the slaves amounted to £1910 currency. John Guerard expected the vessel to make a great voyage as it lost only 4 of the 208 slaves bought at Gambia and brought back £500 sterling of the original cargo of trade goods, having failed to get its full complement of slaves. He claimed the master was ‘a Prodigious Clever fellow [who] understands the Trade perfectly well and as he had the Start[,] Commanded the Trade & would not Suffer any to do Business till he had Gott what he Design’d. he Might have Complated his full Number [of slaves] by Staying a Little Longer but Judged it more for his Owners Interest to Come Earlyer in the Season by which Conduct they’l Reap the Advantage’. He reported that the first slaves of the vessel sold for £260 currency for men and £240 currency for women, but that prices were likely to fall later.

According to its muster roll the vessel left Bristol with 30 crew and returned with 11. It appears to have arrived at St Kitts with 22 crew and to have discharged 10 there on 16 May 1755 before sailing on to South Carolina. One other man died on the run home. Mortality among the slaves was said to have been 'pretty considerable', but the 243 sold by Austin & Laurens on 24–5 June were said to have been a 'very pretty Cargo', consisting of 116 men, 45 women, 49 boys, and 33 girls. The average price per slave was £33.15s.6d. and the sale grossed some £8196 sterling. Less than £1000 in cash or ready money was reported received at the sale but 'scarcely one sold for longer Credit than January'. The vessel loaded 288 barrels of rice and some 60 barrels of pitch on the owners' account plus 30 hogsheads of skins on freight for its return journey to Bristol. It was hoped that the slave sales would 'make a middling good Voyage'. Import duties on the slaves totalled £2415 currency.

According to its muster roll the vessel left Bristol with 22 crew and enlisted a further man at the African coast on 22 July 1755. It apparently arrived at Antigua with 14 crew, having lost 9, including Fitzherbert, since leaving Bristol. The losses included 4 who reportedly turned pirate at the coast. Four of the crew were discharged at Antigua, and 3 fresh crew were enlisted there on 10 December. Two men died on the run home. The vessel was reported to have arrived at Old Calabar from Andony in great distress.

The vessel reportedly passed St Kitts with 296 slaves in good order on 25 March 1756, bound for South Carolina. At South Carolina the sale of the slaves was advertised to begin on 27 April, agents Inglis, Pickering & Wraxall. Described by Henry Laurens as 'the best Cargo that Ever we Saw from that Country' and 'a most butifull Cargo of the Sort chiefly young People from 15 to 20 which are not accustom'd to destroy themselves like those who are Older', the slaves tended nevertheless to sell slowly, up to 40 seemingly still 'on hand' on 18 May. Moreover, sales required long credit, many having been sold for 'next years Pay'. Import duties on the slaves totalled £2590 currency. According to its muster roll the vessel left Bristol with 30 crew and returned with 12. Twenty of the original crew appear to have reached St Kitts. Twelve were discharged there and at South Carolina by 15 May 1756. Four new men enlisted on 18 June.

According to its muster roll the vessel left Bristol with 30 crew and returned with 14. Seventeen of the original crew were lost in the Gambia and the vessel reached Jamaica with only 13 crew. Six of the surviving crew were discharged at Jamaica. One re-enlisted together with six fresh crew on 18 November. It was reported from James Fort in the Gambia on 28 March that the vessel expected to load 250 slaves, but that it faced 'gloomy prospects', slave prices having reached £12 a head. At Gambia the vessel appears to have traded in tandem with the Success (see 1755/17) and to have taken on board the 'grown Slaves' of the latter while it sailed with its own 'small Slaves' to Barbados. Reports from South Carolina suggest that smallpox was rife at Gambia at this time and that the prospects for Gambia vessels were 'very indifferent'.

Letters of marque were declared on 5 July 1756 when William Gordon was also named as an owner of the vessel. According to its muster roll it left Bristol with 44 crew and reached Jamaica with probably 40. Seventeen were discharged there between 8 September and 6 October 1757. The vessel was reported to have sailed from Anamaboe on the Gold Coast on 12 July 1757 with 400 slaves for Jamaica. It appears to have resisted an attack from a French squadron at Anamaboe, but on its voyage from Jamaica to Bristol was reported to have been captured by the French privateer Sampson and sent into Bayonne. The 23 crew remaining with the ship at this time were paid off on 6 November 1757.

Letters of marque were declared on 10 June 1756 when Waiter Lougher and Isaac Edwards were named as owners of the vessel. According to its muster roll it lost 13 of its crew before reaching Barbados; one of these ran away at St Thomas in Africa on 5 June 1757. Eighteen of the surviving crew were discharged at Barbados and South Carolina between 23 July and 15 October 1757. Eleven new men enlisted at Barbados between 30 July and 2 August. All except one were discharged at South Carolina on 2 September. A further 11 crew enlisted at South Carolina on 4 December. Austin & Laurens were agents for the sale of the slaves at South Carolina. Import duties on the slaves totalled £1945 currency.

Letters of marque were declared on 10 June 1756, when Joshua Powell and John Ruscombe were also named as owners of the vessel. The vessel was reported on 6 December 1756 to be only half slaved and paying 50 bars per slave at Bonny, 'notwithstanding it had been there 3 Months'. It appears to have left the coast about 31 January 1757. It was later reported taken and carried into Martinique.

Letters of marque were declared on 24 June 1756 when John Powell, William Tombs and William Delpratt were also named as owners of the vessel. Its muster roll shows that it left Bristol with 29 crew and returned with 13. Twenty-six of the original crew reached Jamaica where 21 were discharged between 21 March and 20 June 1757. Eight new crew enlisted between 4 August and 1 September. The vessel reportedly sailed from Anamaboe on 22 December 1756 with 240 slaves.

According to its muster roll the vessel left Bristol with 29 crew and returned with 10. Of the original crew, 17 arrived at South Carolina where 11 were discharged between 8 October and 23 November 1756. Four new crew enlisted on 17 December. The sale of the slaves was advertised to begin on 7 October, agents Benjamin Stead, Benjamin Smith & Co. Import duties on the slaves amounted to £1235 currency.

The vessel appears to have left Gambia about 20 June 1756. Mortality among the slaves in the middle passage was reportedly ‘very inconsiderable’. Of the 154 slaves delivered to South Carolina, 100 were ‘stout Men’. The master was said to have ‘made a very extraordinary purchase & the Voyage must have been so had our Sales been tolerable notwithstanding he has had the small Pox and must perform a long Quarantine before he will be permitted to sell’. The sale of the slaves was advertised to begin on 14 September, agents Middleton & Brailsford. Import duties on the slaves totalled £1380 currency. According to its muster roll the vessel left Bristol with 23 crew and returned with 15. All but one of the original crew reached South Carolina, where 8 were discharged between 15 and 18 September. One new man enlisted on 15 October. The vessel was apparently sold and re-named the Cape Coast before its next voyage to Africa in 1757 (see 1757/3).

The vessel was reported to have arrived at Cape Coast on 14 April 1759 with 110 slaves from windward and to have sailed from Cape Coast for Carolina on 2 September with 230 slaves. It was also reported to have been attacked by an enemy privateer carrying 14 guns and 150 men two days before reaching Jamaica. Three of the Marlborough's crew, including the master, were reported killed in the attack but the privateer was said to have been forced to bear away 'greatly shatter'd'. According to letters of marque declared on 1 July 1757, the vessel's other owners were Thomas Farr, William Tombs, Isaac Elton and Samuel Sedgeley.

Total investment in the voyage was £4181.0s.9d. This included £300 for the ship, £1527.16s.6d. for its outfit, and £2360.4s.3d. for trade goods. Shareholders in the venture were Henry Bright (1/3), Jeremiah Ames (1/3), Corsley Rogers & son (1/6), and Abraham Watson (1/6). According to its accounts, the vessel left Bristol with 32 crew, the monthly wage bill being £76. After slaving at Bonny (or possibly New Calabar), it was taken in its middle passage by a French ship. It was then retaken by H.M.S. Arundell and sent into Antigua where it was sold at salvage. It appears to have had 70 slaves still alive on its arrival at the island, for head money payments to the ship's doctor, normally 1s. per slave, totalled £3.10s. The vessel's slaves and ivory were sold at Antigua by John Halliday. The balance from the sales was remitted by Halliday on 16 January 1760 by means of a bill at 90 days sight drawn on Richard & Richard Oliver of London. The average price of the crew's privilege slaves was £20.13s.3d. Total net returns on the voyage, after salvage costs, were £1969.16s.4½d.

According to its muster roll the vessel left Bristol with 27 crew and returned with 9. Eighteen of the original crew appear to have reached Maryland, where 11 were discharged on 15 August 1761. Two new crew enlisted on 22 August. Thomas Easton also appears to have been a shareholder in the voyage. Thomas Ringgold and Samuel Galloway sold the slaves at Maryland, and reported that the vessel had lost a large part of its slaves before reaching the colony and that many of the survivors were ‘in very bad Condition’. In the circumstances, they claimed, the sales of the slaves were ‘Monstrous’, though some had been sold on 9 or even 12 months credit. No more than two-thirds of the payments for the slaves were expected to be remitted by the ship. This, it was claimed, ‘is as much as is usually made’.

Letters of marque were declared on 18 April 1762 when the other owners of the vessel were named as James Laroche jr, John Gresley, William Delpratt, and John Thompson. According to its muster roll it left Bristol with 43 crew and returned with 23. Forty-one of the original crew reached Antigua where 18 were discharged on 18 May 1763. Its journal suggests that the vessel reached Cape Mount in Africa on 25 June 1762, where it traded for rice and water until 16 September. It then sailed to the Gold Coast, where it traded for slaves at Anamaboe and Cape Coast between 18 October 1762 and 1 March 1763. Two uprisings among its slaves were reportedly thwarted, the first on 22 February, while the vessel was still at the coast, the second on 4 March at sea. One report suggested that the vessel arrived at Cape Coast on 29 November 1762 with 80 slaves from windward and sailed on 28 February 1763 with 400 for the West Indies, but its journal shows it left Anamaboe on 1 March 1763 with 438 slaves for Antigua. Forty-four slaves died before the surviving 394 slaves (including 277 men and boys and 117 women and girls) were sold at Antigua by Messrs. Blizard, Sherff & Byam on 18–19 May 1763. The vessel’s return cargo for Bristol included 45 hogsheads and 4 barrels of sugar as well as a large quantity of stone and shingle ballast.

Robert Gordon was also named as an owner of the vessel. According to its muster roll it left Bristol with 38 crew and returned with 13. Only 4 of the original crew seem to have reached Jamaica. Nine new crew were enlisted on 11 February 1764. It was reported on 5 November 1763 that the vessel had been ‘buffeted at sea’ for 6 weeks off Africa before meeting the General Murray (see 1763/12) which put an officer and 6 crew on board the Britannia and escorted it to St Thomas. Reports from St Thomas indicate that it arrived in a ‘deplorable condition’ with only the master and 8 other men alive out of 44 crew. Of the surviving crew, only 2 were able to serve on deck. Two Liverpool vessels reportedly helped the vessel off the coast. Later reports suggest that the vessel passed St Kitts on 29 September 1763 with about 300 slaves bound for Jamaica.

According to its muster roll the vessel arrived at Jamaica with only 28 of its original crew. Forty crew died at Calabar between 7 August 1763 and 9 April 1764, and a further 3 died at sea between 29 April and 12 May. In addition, 3 crew deserted at Calabar and Anabona, and 12 were discharged at Anabona and St Thomas. Of the 28 who reached Jamaica, 3 died and a further 14 were discharged between 20 June and 7 October 1764. Fourteen fresh crew were enlisted at Jamaica between 19 July and 5 November. Five of the original crew were discharged at St Kitts on 26 November on the return voyage to Bristol. According to the naval office list the vessel entered Jamaica with 22 crew. It reportedly called at St Kitts with 530 slaves on board on its way to Jamaica. Hibbert & Jackson sold 294 male and 104 female slaves imported by the vessel at Jamaica. It was advertised for sale on its return to Bristol.

John and Robert Gordon were also named as owners of the vessel. According to its muster roll it left Bristol with 46 crew and returned with 19. Thirty-four of the original crew reached South Carolina where 20 were discharged between 18 June and 25 July 1764. Five new crew enlisted on 13 September. Smith & Brewton were agents for the sale of the slaves at South Carolina. Import duties on the slaves totalled £2335 currency. The vessel’s return cargo included 171 barrels of pitch and 197 logs and square blocks of mahogany on freight to Cowles & Harford of Bristol.

According to its muster roll the vessel left Bristol with 50 crew and returned with 13. Thirty-five of the original crew reached Jamaica where 24 were discharged between 15 December 1763 and 30 April 1764. Two new crew enlisted on 14 May 1764. One report suggests that the vessel called at Havana but there is no other evidence to support this. Hibbert & Jackson sold 295 male and 141 female slaves imported by the vessel at Jamaica. Its return cargo included 24 hogsheads of sugar shipped by Hibbert & Jackson on account of John Hugh Smyth and Colonel French.

According to its muster roll the vessel reached Barbados with 40 of its original crew. All the crew were discharged there between 28 October and 18 November 1764 and a new crew of 23, including Richard Craddock as master was engaged between 6 and 10 November. These in turn were all discharged at Havana on 27 December and a fresh crew of 18, including Robert Smith as master, was enlisted at Havana on the following day. This crew was discharged at Barbados between 2 February and 3 March 1765. A final crew of 16 men, including William Carter as master, was enlisted at Barbados on 23 May 1765. Only 100 slaves were sold at Barbados, the remaining 278 presumably being exported to Havana. Alexander Stevenson sold the slaves at Barbados.

Formerly the Williamsburgh (see 1762/19), the vessel had 31 cew, according to its muster roll, when it left Bristol. Two more crew enlisted in Africa on 2 December 1764 and 21 April 1765 and the vessel arrived at South Carolina with 27 crew. Twenty-three crew were discharged at South Carolina between 20 September and 7 October, and 8 new crew enlisted between 6 October and 6 November 1764. The vessel arrived at Bristol with 10 crew, 2 having died on the run home. The naval office list reports that the vessel entered South Carolina with only 15 crew. The vessel was reported to have arrived at Cape Coast on 14 September 1764 and to have left for Jamaica with 200 slaves on 1 May 1765. It was later reported spoken with on 6 August in latitude 32.18 N. longitude 73 W. with 222 slaves on board, all well. Middleton, Liston & Hope were agents for the sale of the slaves at South Carolina which was advertised to begin on 4 September 1765. Import duties on the slaves totalled £1695 currency for 179 slaves. The vessel returned to Bristol from South Carolina via Waterford.

According to its muster roll the vessel left Bristol with 47 crew and returned with 22. Eight additional crew were enlisted in Africa on 17 July 1765 and the vessel appears to have reached Antigua with 33 crew. Fourteen were discharged at Antigua between 13 June and 11 August 1766 and 5 new crew enlisted between 13 July and 25 August. Two crew, including the master William Miller, died on the run home. The vessel anchored at Gallinas Road, north of Cape Mount on 28 October 1764, and then from 3 November to 19 December traded at Cape Mesurade and Bassau [Windward Coast] for rice, water and wood. It was reported to have arrived at Cape Coast on 17 February 1765 and to have departed for Antigua with 300 slaves on 10 March 1766. One report suggested that 'for these many months' trade at the Gold Coast ‘has been miserable indeed; so very bad, that poor old Miller (who you know, always brings good cargoes [of trade goods]) has been here six months, and has not purchased 20 slaves’. On returning to Bristol, the vessel was advertised for sale on 24 September 1768 when it was described as 200 tons and rebuilt from the keel since its last voyage. Its sale included a parcel of ‘guiney goods’.

A newspaper report on 15 February 1766 suggested that the vessel was at Africa from Antigua; it was subsequently reported at Antigua from Africa. It is possible that the vessel first sailed to Antigua before journeying to Africa. Alternatively, it may have made two slaving voyages to the coast. Punter seems to have been master of the Mary (see 1764/28) on its voyage to Africa and Antigua.

The vessel appears to have traded at the Gold Coast, for one report notes that trade there was ‘miserable indeed’ and that ‘Crump has been here upwards of five months, and has not got 15.[slaves]’. According to its muster roll the vessel left Bristol with 33 crew and enlisted 3 more in Africa on 17 July 1765. It appears to have arrived at Jamaica with 31 crew and discharged 25 there between 10 April and 16 October 1766. It appears to have initially departed from Jamaica before the end of September, but reportedly sprung its main and foremast and put back into Kingston on 28 September. Eleven new crew enlisted on 24 October and the vessel returned home with 17 crew. Isaac Elton was also named as an owner of the vessel.

According to its muster roll the vessel left Bristol with 52 crew and returned with 26. Forty-nine of the original crew appear to have reached Antigua. Twenty-six were discharged there and at Jamaica between 16 June and 7 September 1765. Three new crew enlisted on 18 September. The vessel reportedly reached Antigua with 500 slaves but the naval office list shows that only 300 were entered at Jamaica. Hibbert & Jackson sold 232 male and 76 female slaves imported by the vessel at Jamaica. Its return cargo included 10 hogsheads of sugar shipped by Hibbert & Jackson on the account and risk of John Hugh Smyth.

The other owners of the vessel were named as Israel Allerin (Alleyn?), John Fowler, James Ruscombe, Richard Symes, Sydenham Teaste and John Vaughan. According to its muster roll it left Bristol with 49 crew and returned with 18. Seventeen of the original crew died and the vessel appears to have reached Dominica with 30 crew. Sixteen crew were discharged there and at South Carolina between 2 October 1765 and 6 January 1766, and 5 new crew enlisted on 22 May 1766. The vessel reportedly arrived at Dominica with 220 slaves but entered South Carolina with only 176 (or 172). Middleton, Liston & Hope were agents for the sale of the slaves at South Carolina. Import duties on them totalled £1740 currency.

According to its muster roll the vessel left Bristol with 52 crew and returned with 22. Seventeen of the original crew died at Old Calabar between 3 April and 26 December 1765 and eight new crew were enlisted from the King David (see 1764/24) on 3 September 1765. The vessel arrived at Jamaica with 36 crew and discharged 21 there between 22 February and 5 June 1766. Seven new crew enlisted between 17 March and 6 June. Hibbert & Jackson sold 208 male and 175 female slaves imported by the vessel at Jamaica. Its return cargo included 20 hogsheads of sugar shipped by Hibbert & Jackson on account of John Hugh Smyth, the charge for freight being 3s.6d. per cwt. The vessel was reported to have taken only 5 weeks and 3 days to sail home from Jamaica.

Walter Lougher was also named as an owner of the vessel. According to its muster roll it left Bristol with 48 crew and returned with 19. Eight crew were put on board the Indian Queen (see 1764/18) at Old Calabar on 3 September 1765. The vessel appears to have reached Jamaica with 37 of its original crew, though the naval office list records that it entered Jamaica with 30. Twenty-three crew were discharged at Jamaica between 30 November 1765 and 12 April 1766. Five new crew enlisted there between 5 March and 1 April 1766. Hibbert & Jackson sold 188 male and 130 female slaves imported by the vessel at Jamaica.

The vessel was advertised for sale on 11 February 1764 at 170 tons and reportedly lengthened and rebuilt in 1755. According to its muster roll it left Bristol with 36 crew and returned with 22. Thirty-one of the original crew reached Jamaica where 21 were discharged between 16 August and 10 December 1765. Twelve new crew enlisted on 12 December. The vessel was reported to have arrived at Cape Coast on 13 December 1764 with 100 slaves from windward and to have left for Jamaica on 10 October 1765 with 280 slaves. This last date is clearly an error.

The vessel appears to have called at Tenerife on its way to Africa, for 2 of its crew deserted there. Of the original crew, 14 seem to have reached St Kitts, where 5 were discharged between 11 February and 19 April 1765. The owners of the vessel seem to have intended that its slaves should be sold by Henry Laurens at South Carolina, but Laurens wrote to them on 9 November 1764, advising them that he had ‘resigned several African Ships of considerable Value this Year & cannot yet presume to take upon me the sole charge of one’. He later wrote to John & James Graham & Co. of Georgia, proposing to direct the vessel to them. In the event it stopped at St Kitts.

According to its muster roll the vessel left Bristol with 50 crew and returned with 29. Forty-eight of the original crew reached St Kitts which the vessel reportedly passed by on 26 July 1766 with 362 slaves on board, having buried 137. Thirty crew were discharged at St Kitts and Jamaica between 25 July and 9 September 1766. Thirteen new men enlisted on 24 October. The vessel was advertised for sale at Bristol on 5 September 1767; its dimensions were given as keel, 96 feet; beam, 27 feet; hold, 8 feet; and height between decks, 4 feet 2 inches.

According to its muster roll the vessel left Bristol with 13 crew and returned with 9. Eleven of the original crew arrived at St Kitts. Seven were discharged there and at South Carolina between 15 November 1767 and 18 January 1768. Three new men enlisted at St Kitts on 16 November and 2 further crew enlisted at South Carolina on 20 January 1768. John Chilcott, master of the Cornwall (see 1766/10), seems to have boarded the vessel at St Kitts and sailed with it to South Carolina with an unspecified number of slaves that included 38 owned by Smith & Baillie of St Kitts and possibly some of the Cornwall's. Described by Henry Laurens as 'the most sightly that have been imported for many Years and in all appearances the most healthy', the slaves were reportedly taken by William Price of South Carolina to Georgia where they were to be consigned to Messrs. Price, Hest & Head for sale. In the event they were sold by John Graham & Co. of Savannah, Georgia. Eighty of them, including those owned by Smith & Baillie, were said to have been bought by James (?) Penman & Co. of St Augustine, Florida, at an average price of £33.13s. sterling each, payable in bills on London at 90 days sight.

Of the original crew, 47 appear to have reached St Kitts where 26 were discharged between 2 August and 5 December 1767. Six new men enlisted on 20 December. At St Kitts, John Chilcott appears to have joined the Betsey (see 1766/4). This vessel arrived at South Carolina on 2 December 1767 with an unspecified number of slaves that possibly included some of the Cornwall’s. The Cornwall itself was advertised for sale at Bristol on 21 April 1768, its tonnage being given as 220 tons.

According to its muster roll the vessel left Bristol with 32 crew and returned with 12. Twenty of the original crew reached Grenada, where 2 ran away and one new man enlisted on 10 July 1768. Of the 19 crew who arrived at Virginia, 13 were discharged between 8 August and 25 October 1768. Six new crew enlisted on 15 November. The vessel appears to have traded at Cape Benda, the river Ambris and the Congo in Angola. It was mistakenly reported to have been cut off at the Congo by Thomas Gullan, master of the Constantine (see 1767/5). At Virginia, the slaves were advertised for sale at Bermuda Hundred on 29 August 1768, agents for the sale being Burnley & Braikenridge. Some of the slaves were evidently still unsold in late September, when the vessel was advertised as available for freighting tobacco to Bristol. On its return, it was advertised for sale on 30 March 1769, being described as 130 tons and suitable for the African trade in all respects.

(7) 21 March (pass 4 March)  (14) 24 April (3 July) 1771

The vessel was reported spoken with in May 1769 on its way to Old Calabar, all well. According to its muster roll it left Bristol with 52 crew and returned with 15. Of the original crew, only 7 reached Jamaica. Of the remaining crew, 18 ran away at Calabar and 27 died at Calabar or at sea. Six of the 7 surviving crew were discharged at Jamaica between 2 July and 26 September 1770. Fifteen new men enlisted between 22 October and 11 December 1770. One ran away on 11 March 1771, probably in Ireland. Hibbert & Jackson sold 81 male and 97 female slaves imported by the vessel at Jamaica. It was reported to have called at Beerhaven [Castletown Bearhaven] in Ireland on its voyage home to Bristol. On its return, it was advertised for sale on 27 May 1771, being described as 250 tons and rebuilt at Bristol.

The vessel sailed from London. According to its muster roll it carried 17 crew on its departure from London and returned to Bristol with 10 crew. All the original crew appear to have reached South Carolina, where 7 were discharged on 14 June. The vessel reportedly lost 5 slaves in its passage to South Carolina. The surviving slaves were advertised for sale on 26 June, agents Thomas-Loughton & Roger Smith; the advertisement noted that the slaves included 120 men and women and 30 boys and girls aged 10–15 years old. Import duties on the slaves totalled £1440 currency for 144 slaves. On leaving South Carolina the vessel sailed for Newfoundland.

Note: 1. Names of masters of vessels, merchants, shipowners, ships, and slave factors are not listed separately through the index but are collected together under the appropriate head. Masters who were shipowners are indicated by an asterisk. Merchant-shipowners are listed simply as merchants. Where different ships share the same name they are individually indexed.

2. Where more than one form of a surname appears in the text, the name is indexed under its more common form, with variations given in brackets. Only the more common form of first names is given in the index.

3. References to Jamaica and ports therein – Kingston, Montego Bay, and Savanna la Mar – are indexed only in those instances where details of the numbers of slaves delivered or sold have been found.

4. Africa, America and Bristol have not been indexed.
